

SHINING
IN THE DARKNESS

TWR's renewed focus carries light to the unreached

MORE ON PAGE 6

twr MAGAZINE
2026-27 VOL. 48 #1 • TWR.ORG

INSIDE

SOUNDS OF HOPE CATALOG
A SOMALI INMATE'S LIFELINE PG 4

IN THIS ISSUE

3 Because you gave & anniversary milestones
4 How a Somali prison inmate dialed in to freedom in Christ
6 TWR's path forward
9 Reaching Romani children
10 MOTION's latest: Psalm 23
12 How an octopus saved a boy's life
14 Drawing closer to God
15 A priceless blessing

PRESIDENT & CEO
Andy Schick

CHIEF DEVELOPMENT OFFICER
Tim Klingbeil

DIRECTOR OF MARKETING & COMMUNICATIONS
David McCreary

MAGAZINE EDITOR
Dawn Overman

ASSOCIATE EDITORS
John Lundy & Jon Hill

GRAPHIC DESIGN
Nicole Hughes

COVER IMAGE
Video still from MOTION's Psalm 23

TWR Magazine (ISSN 1093-0124) is published biannually by TWR, P.O. Box 8700, Cary, NC, 27512.

PRIVACY POLICY
TWR values our relationship with you and respects your right to privacy (read privacy policy at twr.org/policies).

POSTAGE
Periodicals postage paid at Cary, N.C., and additional mailing offices.

SUBSCRIPTION
This is a free publication, sustained by contributions from those who have chosen voluntarily to support this worldwide ministry. Names on TWR's mailing list are used exclusively by TWR and are not sold to or rented by any other organization.

©2026 Trans World Radio

Published Dec. 2026 • Printed in the USA
Vol. 48, No. 1 • PR31300313

TWR.ORG/SOCIAL

The light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it." – JOHN 1:5

PRESIDENT'S COLUMN

Andy Schick
TWR President and CEO

I find myself returning to the verse above often, especially when I think about the people and the places TWR serves. Darkness takes many forms around the world, including the darkness of persecution, where believers risk everything simply to gather in secret. The darkness of isolation, where entire communities have never once heard the name of Jesus. The darkness of despair, where war, displacement and loss leave people wondering if anyone, anywhere, even knows they exist.

And yet John's words remain true in every one of those places: The darkness has not overcome the light.

This is the confidence that drives our ministry forward. We don't send radio waves, podcasts and digital content into the world's most difficult places because we're naive about the darkness there. We do it because we believe, without hesitation, that light is stronger. A single gospel broadcast, heard in secret on a hidden device, can break through decades of spiritual silence. An online or text conversation with someone searching for truth can be the first flicker of light in a life that has never known one.

I'm reminded that light doesn't need to overpower darkness through force. It simply needs to shine. That's what Jesus did, and it's what he continues to do through his Church — and through ministries like TWR — today. We can't create the light. But we can carry it into places that have waited far too long to see it.

As you read through this inspiring issue of TWR Magazine, I hope you'll see story after story of the light of Christ illuminating hurting hearts in unreached villages, in restricted nations, in the quiet corners of someone's darkest season. None of it happens without you. Your prayers and your partnership are, in a very real sense, part of how that light travels to the ends of the earth.

Darkness is real, but so is the light, and it cannot be overcome.

Thank you for shining alongside us.

BECAUSE YOU GAVE

EXTENDING THE REACH OF THE GOOD NEWS

Hope for Iran

TWR broadcasts over a strong AM signal to the people of Iran in Farsi (also called Persian) and several other languages. Three online channels further encourage Persian speakers: Persian World Radio, Persian Word of God Radio and Persian Worship Radio. A listener in Iran said, "Thank God for Persian World Radio, for delivering God's Word so beautifully. I was feeling weak, but your message gave me strength. We can do all things in the name of Jesus Christ. Thankful for your presence and your beautiful message." Thank you for the $392,600 you gave this fiscal year so TWR can be there for Iranians.

Mission 66

TWR's audio Bible study called Mission 66 guides listeners through all 66 books of the Bible in an engaging format. The biblical and practical applications resonate with believers and seekers alike. Listeners report finding hope, faith in Jesus and a deeper understanding of Scripture. A listener in Venezuela said, "I was desperate and discouraged with no desire to live. Listening to your program, there has been a profound change in my life. Thanks to God, I believed in Jesus, and you were the channel to make that decision." Your gifts totaling $367,845 this fiscal year will go a long way to further support Mission 66. Thank you!

Hope for the Horn of Africa

Your gifts of $239,950 to TWR's Hope for the Horn of Africa fund are helping us to minister in some of the most difficult areas of the world to be a Christian. This region comprises the countries of Djibouti, Eritrea, Ethiopia and Somalia, and some wider definitions also include Kenya, Sudan, South Sudan and Uganda. A listener wrote, "Our fellowship group meets, and we are learning from TWR's programs. We have also learned the importance of prayer. Jesus taught us how to pray to God in his name. We have learned so much from TWR's station."

anniversary milestones

Beginning this month and running through the first half of 2027, we are honoring these colleagues who are celebrating service milestones of five years or more with TWR. Join us in praising the Lord for their faithful service.

60 YEARS
Larry McGuire

50 YEARS
Brad & Sandra Swanson

40 YEARS
Daniel Plett
Bob & Claire Rothrock

25 YEARS
Mike & Eli Sabin

20 YEARS
Tyler Steingard

15 YEARS
Jeannine Klingbeil
Daryl & Gaynelle Renshaw

5 YEARS
Dianne Childers
Bob Glendening
John Lundy
Soyanne Mansfield
Harmony Rogers
Abi Russell
Georgina Thompson de Johnson

Hope for the Middle East

Your support and prayers bolster our efforts to provide comfort in the Arabic-speaking world spanning the Middle East and North Africa. A listener in Egypt told us, "Your program gives me peace when I listen. It makes me think about God in a new way." Another Egyptian asked, "Do you have other programs that explain the Bible like this?" For many, listening to media is a safe way to explore God's Word. During war time or any time, trusting in Jesus brings hope. Thank you for the $264,370 you gave to support TWR's programs for Arabic speakers.

HOW A SOMALI PRISON INMATE DIALED IN TO freedom in Christ

BY GEOFFREY OTIENO

In 2016, Ibrahim Guleed* was like many young Somali men trying to escape fear and uncertainty. Life in Somalia had become dangerous as terrorist attacks increased across the country. Security forces responded with aggressive crackdowns, leading to random arrests and growing suspicion everywhere.

At the time, Ibrahim was in Bosaso, Somalia's third-largest city, preparing travel documents to flee to Yemen as a refugee. He hoped to leave behind the violence and begin a safer life. But before those plans could become reality, his life took a devastating turn.

One day, security officers arrested him in the street without warning.

He was falsely accused of being linked to a terrorist group. Before he could explain who he was, he was transported more than 700 kilometers (435 miles) away to a prison in the dry and scorching Guban region, a coastal desert in northern Somalia.

Loneliness became his daily companion.
Silence filled the walls of his prison cell.
The only item prison officers allowed him to keep?
A small radio*. But what seemed ordinary would become the instrument God used to save his life.

Forgotten in the desert

The prison felt like the end of the world.

Temperatures in Guban often rose above 40 degrees Celsius (104 degrees Fahrenheit). The land was harsh, empty and unforgiving. Because he was accused of terrorism, Ibrahim was placed alone in a small room, separated from everyone else. Days turned into months, and months into years.

No relatives came to visit him. No friends searched for him. For four and a half years, nobody even knew where he was.

Loneliness became his daily companion. Silence filled the walls of his prison cell. The only item prison officers allowed him to keep? A small radio. But what seemed ordinary would become the instrument God used to save his life.

A radio changes everything

Every evening, Ibrahim tuned through crackling shortwave frequencies. In the remote Guban region, shortwave signals were often the only broadcasts beaming across the Horn of Africa. He listened to different broadcasts simply to escape the silence.

Then one evening, his hands stopped turning the dial. Through the static came a calm voice speaking in his own Somali language. The message was unlike anything he had heard before. It spoke about God with peace, compassion and truth. The program was Trans World Radio's Thru the Bible (TTB).

Something touched his heart.

Night after night, Ibrahim returned to the same station. Alone in his prison cell, he began listening faithfully as the Bible was explained in a simple and personal way. The radio slowly became more than entertainment. It became his teacher, his comfort and his connection to hope.

For one and a half years, he followed the broadcasts every evening.

As he listened, the Word of God began changing him from the inside. The bitterness, fear and anger he carried slowly gave way to peace. In that lonely prison, God was reaching a forgotten man through a shortwave signal crossing deserts and prison walls.

One night, one prayer, one decision

Then one night, everything changed.

Deep conviction filled his heart. Unable to resist any longer, Ibrahim fell to his knees and began to pray. He prayed through the night, pouring out his pain, confusion, loneliness and brokenness before God.

Somewhere in those hours of prayer, Ibrahim surrendered his life to Jesus Christ. For the first time in years, he felt peace. Exhausted, he eventually fell asleep.

The next morning, he was awakened by a knock at the cell door. Standing before him was the prison commander. The commander looked at him and simply said:

"Wake up and go. Leave this prison."

Ibrahim could hardly believe it.

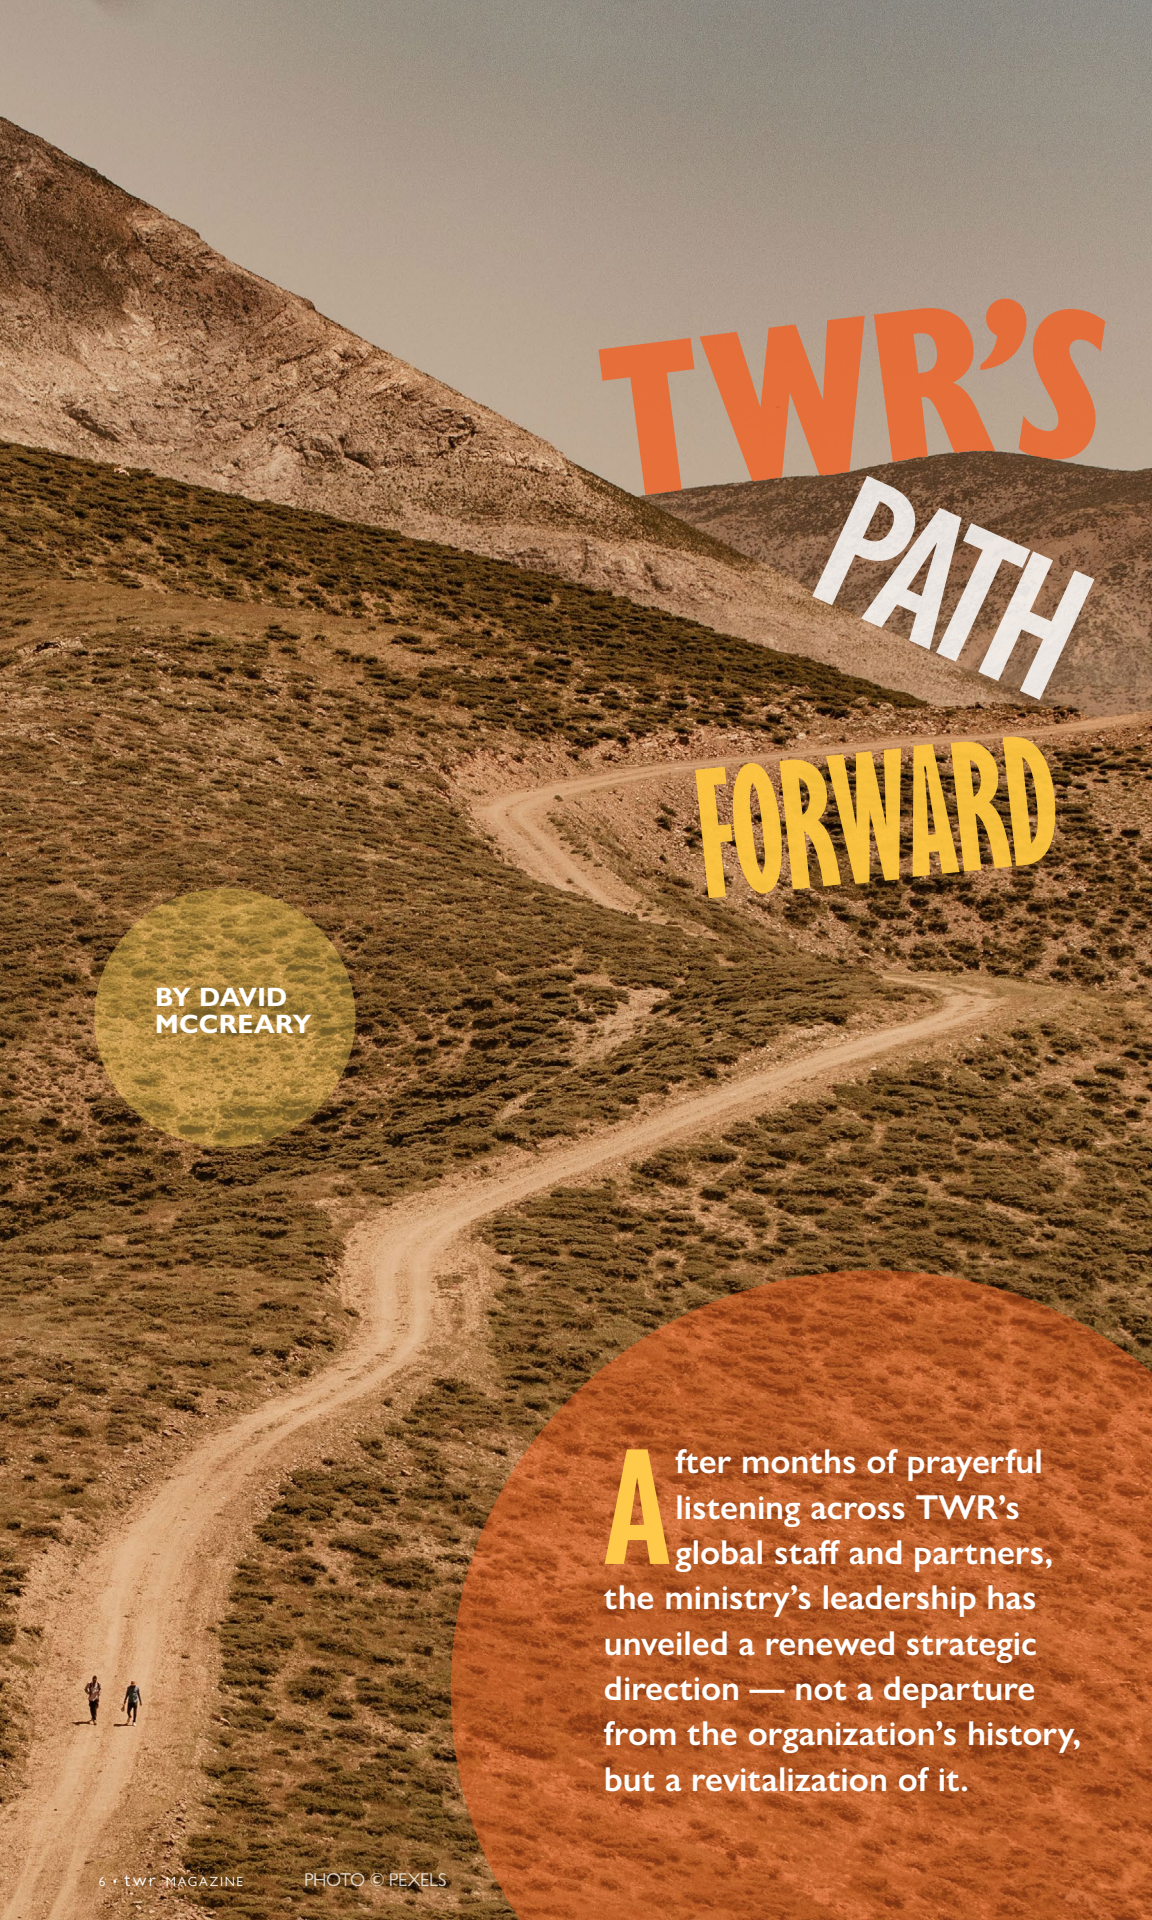

Without conditions, without explanation, and only hours after giving his life to Christ, he was released. He had been in prison for four and a half years.

Reflecting on his journey, Ibrahim Guleed says:

"Today I am a Christian. I stand for unity and peace. I embrace everyone with open hands. My mind was darkened by ignorance, but now the light of Christ has shone into my life."

Geoffrey Otieno serves as audience relations manager for TWR Kenya.

Name changed to protect his identity. The testimony was shared with TWR Kenya's Audience Relations office. A version of this story appeared in twr.org/newsroom in October as part of Hope Within Reach.*

TWR'S PATH FORWARD

BY DAVID MCCREARY

After months of prayerful listening across TWR's global staff and partners, the ministry's leadership has unveiled a renewed strategic direction — not a departure from the organization's history, but a revitalization of it.

PHOTO © PEXELS

HOW TWR IS REFINING ITS FOCUS TO REACH THE WORLD'S MOST UNREACHED PLACES

"From its beginning more than 70 years ago, TWR has been about bringing the good news of the gospel to the world's hardest-to-reach places, often where access is limited and few others go," says TWR President Andy Schick. "That commitment hasn't changed."

What's different now, he explains, is the focus: "We are sharpening and extending our focus not only to reach our audience for Christ, but also to engage with them and connect them into local Christian fellowship."

That emphasis rests on a mission TWR has carried since 1952, rooted in the Great Commission: to engage people with the gospel in their own heart languages, strengthen their faith through solid biblical teaching and connect them to a local church. The renewed strategy doesn't rewrite that calling, but it organizes it around three clear commitments: reach, engage and connect.

REACH • INTO THE MOST DIFFICULT, SILENT PLACES

TWR's primary audience is unreached people groups: those in places where the Church doesn't exist yet, where it's too small to sustain evangelism, or where Christians and seekers face active persecution. That's a deliberate narrowing of focus, not because other audiences don't matter, but because specializing in the world's hardest-to-reach places lets TWR build the cultural fluency, trusted local relationships and language expertise that broader efforts can't sustain.

"Where local churches don't exist, TWR may provide the only spiritual food available," Schick explains. "We remain true to our calling to put the hope of Jesus within reach of as many people as possible."

That reach happens across borders, into unreached, silent and dangerous places, using every available form of media — radio, podcasts, video and social platforms among them. "Media lets us reach much of the world's population," Schick notes, pointing to the wide range of digital platforms now carrying that message alongside TWR's historical shortwave, AM and FM networks. For example, he cites an app specifically for Russian-speaking listeners that offers around-the-clock access to heart-language content.

TWR is equally committed to reaching vulnerable populations enduring war, displacement or humanitarian crises, people for whom media is often their only lifeline to hope. As Schick puts it: "Every one of these people needs Jesus."

ENGAGE • WALKING WITH PEOPLE TOWARD FAITH

Reaching someone with the gospel is only the beginning. TWR's strategy places real weight on what comes next: the ongoing work of discipleship and engaging with listeners as they respond, wrestle with faith and grow in their relationship with Christ.

"This Great Commission work means teaching through the Bible in some of the world's most-spoken languages, reaching hearts with tailored programming and comforting weary listeners," Schick says. Programs like Thru the Bible and Mission 66 carry out that teaching, walking listeners book by book through Scripture.

But engagement isn't only about content moving one way – it's personal. Trained local responders carry on real conversations with listeners, sometimes over weeks or months, answering questions and walking alongside them on their spiritual journey.

That encouragement looks different depending on where someone lives and what that individual is facing, whether it's a listener studying Scripture for the first time in a restricted country, a displaced family finding comfort through a broadcast in a refugee camp, or a new believer working through doubts with no pastor nearby. TWR's renewed strategy calls for building a more consistent way to accompany people on a global scale, not just broadcasting to them, but staying in the conversation with them.

CONNECT • BELONGING IN THE LOCAL CHURCH

The final commitment brings the mission full circle: connecting new believers to a community in which they can belong and grow. Where a local church already exists, TWR connects listeners directly to it. Where one doesn't yet exist, local teams help new believers form a small group of their own, using solid discipleship materials, often planting the seed of what may one day become a church.

This has always mattered to TWR, but the renewed strategy crystallizes it into a defined goal that involves developing networks of local churches and Christian communities equipped to receive the very people TWR's broadcasts and digital content are reaching. Media can open a door to faith, but community, whether an established church or a newly formed small group, is where that faith takes root and grows.

In some parts of the world, though, that connection isn't easy to make.

"In places like the Middle East, where it's challenging to get people connected with local believers, we have to be careful to connect them with people we can trust," Schick says. "We're having thousands of online conversations with people who are just discovering the person of Jesus and the idea of salvation."

Schick adds: "One person showed me his death sentence papers, issued by his country's court simply because he became a Christian. He was jailed for six months, escaped, and is now seeking asylum. His wife and children have since come to faith as well, and he showed me a video of his four children being baptized."

The constant beneath the change

Amid the sharpened focus, one thing remains constant: the confidence that this work still matters and that it's still worth doing well.

"We remain true to our calling," Schick says, "putting the hope of Jesus within reach of as many people as possible, resulting in meaningful engagements with our audience and the distribution of radios and other media devices." That kind of engagement, as described above, develops through real, sustained relationships – trained responders, ongoing conversations and a path toward belonging.

None of this happens without the partners who make it possible. "People like you, our faithful supporters, enable TWR to link arms with organizations worldwide to share the gospel," Schick says.

As TWR moves into this next chapter, the invitation is simple: Pray for the unreached people groups TWR is committed to reaching, for the local partners walking alongside new believers and for wisdom as this strategy takes shape in the months ahead. The mission hasn't changed. The focus has simply grown clearer, and hope, as always, remains within reach.

David McCreary serves as director of TWR's Marketing and Communications dept. in Cary, N.C.

PHOTOS © CBN

How hope is reaching Romani children

BY BECKY MATTHEWS

Their people are mostly impoverished and have no homeland of their own. But Romani children in Europe can time travel their way to great adventures, thanks to a partnership between the Christian Broadcasting Network (CBN) and TWR in Europe.

Superbook, created for CBN, follows two children and their robot friend as they travel through time and witness key Bible events. Each episode shares important Christian subjects such as forgiveness, courage, faith and obedience through exciting storytelling and high-quality animation.

CBN's coordinator for the Balkans agreed to make the content available for videos in the Romani language, and the first season of episodes is complete.

By producing Superbook in their heart language, we are providing Romani children with content that is both educational and spiritually strong. Families tell us that children now enjoy listening to and watching Bible stories and then thinking about what they've learned. This shows the spiritual hunger in the community is being met creatively and effectively.

Seeing themselves through a biblical worldview is especially important for the Roma, who at one time were known as "Gypsies." Their population of between 10 million and 12 million makes them one of the largest minority groups in Europe, but they've faced marginalization and discrimination for centuries. According to Amnesty International, millions of Roma live in poverty, and many are threatened with eviction, police harassment and violent attacks. Their children are often educated in segregated schools and receive less schooling.

IMAGES © CBN

That's why TWR in Europe prioritizes outreach to Romani children in cooperation with local churches in the Serbian cities of Leskovac and Jagodina. Other efforts include:

- A new audio Bible story series for children, recorded in Romani, that is now available to families. It includes 60 audio Bible stories in Romani featuring careful storytelling and content that respects their culture.
- Sixteen original Serbian Roma songs (including video clips) and 13 animations produced by Miki and Misha, two Romani pastors and musicians.

Becky Matthews serves as a remote editor and writer for the TWR Europe and CAMENA (Central Asia/Middle East/North Africa) region from her home in the United States. This article is condensed from two of the stories Becky wrote on the Romani people in May 2026 as part of our Hope Within Reach series. Find them at twr.org/hope-within-reach.

THE STORY BEHIND MOTION'S LATEST PROJECT

BY JOHN LUNDY

In the credits to TWR MOTION's latest animated video project, one group of contributors isn't listed.

"That's an actual flock of sheep I was standing in – in the Cotswolds in England," Kelly Gilbert said.

MOTION hadn't committed to its newest project, simply titled Psalm 23, when Gilbert was touring England with a colleague in May 2025. But as the audio producer for the six-person MOTION team, she is attuned to sounds that help tell stories. Thinking of a different project that was underway, a flock of the animals in England's most pastoral setting, free from road noises, was too good to miss.

So an uncredited appearance by Cotswold sheep accents the final seconds of the two-minute Psalm 23 video. Completed by Easter of this year and available online, the latest project marks something of a departure for the 10-year-old ministry in several respects:

- It was initiated by the MOTION team, rather than being created in response to a request from church planters.
- Its original language is English, although it's likely to be offered in other languages.

WATCH THE PSALM 23 VIDEO: TWRMOTION.ORG/PSALMS

- Instead of being presented in multiple episodes, it's a stand-alone project – although making additional Psalms videos is a strong possibility.
- Although the Bible is the primary source material for everything TWR MOTION does, the words in this video are only from the biblical text.

"We just used straight Scripture," Gilbert said. "And that, paired with the visuals, the sound and the music, speaks so powerfully."

THE THOUGHT PROCESS

With a single, short episode, the MOTION team members were able to turn around Psalm 23 more quickly than previous projects, Gilbert said. Journey to Hope, with 20 episodes, took three years from the team's information-gathering visit to Thailand to completion. Psalm 23 began with the group studying a book, David Gibson's The Lord of Psalm 23. But after that, from their initial brainstorming session last December, it was a four-month process.

If you watch the video, it's hard to imagine it being presented in any other way, but a lot of thought and discussion went into what approach to take.

"Did we even want it to be a sheep?" Gilbert said, in explaining the process. "Did we want to see a shepherd? … It could have been a person going through life."

Although the team eventually settled on the sheep and the shepherd, what mattered was what the story said about God and us.

"We realized this is a story about a relationship – about a lost sheep, a fumbling creature, but also one that was created intentionally and is cared for," Gilbert said. "So yes, I may be a little foolish and a little lost, but I am cared for, I am valued. And the shepherd is strong, but also kind and gentle."

THE MAKING OF A VIDEO

What's consistent with all of MOTION's projects – such as the recently completed Journey to Hope, with a message geared to people from Buddhist backgrounds – is the creativity, attention to detail, the willingness to grow artistically and the devotion to glorifying God.

That's why even creating a two-minute video is a lengthy process. From the brainstorming session, the team developed storyboards – rough sketches to provide a sort of table of contents for the intricate artwork ahead. That was followed by increasingly refined illustration. Then MOTION's artists turned to cel animation – a classic technique that dates back to 1914, but that MOTION hadn't used in previous projects.

As audio producer, Gilbert added the narration from voiceover artist Nicky Griffiths, the music composed by Max Corwin, sound effects from an online catalog and, of course, her own recording of those Cotswold sheep.

A CALLING TO COMMUNITY

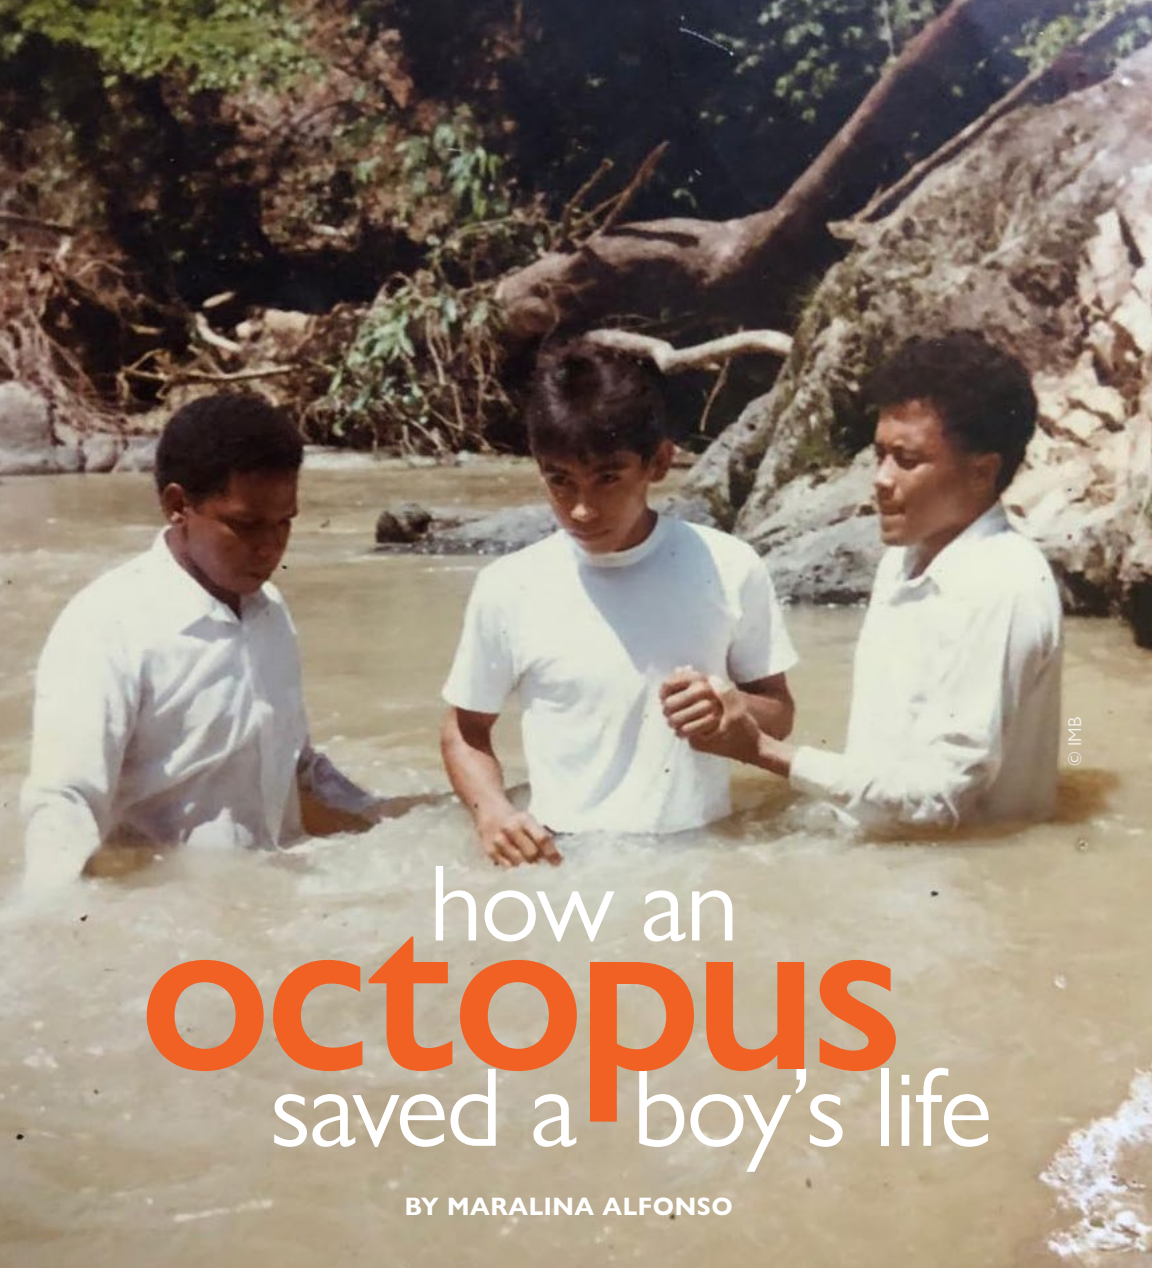

While previous series have focused either on evangelism or early discipleship, Gilbert said Psalm 23 aims to speak to both seekers and believers. She's hopeful it will address one issue in particular:

"There's an epidemic of loneliness in the world," she said, but like the shepherd in Psalm 23, Jesus is "always near, and always will be. I would love to know that it's reaching [lonely] people, that they can see that, ask questions, learn about Jesus, come to him, and come into community."

Even after being immersed in the project for four months, Gilbert is enthused about the Psalm 23 video. She attributes that to the author.

"You don't need anything other than God's Word," she said. "I can testify to that, because it's been so encouraging to me. I love watching it. Every time I get to show it, I'm excited."

John Lundy serves as a writer and editor for TWR's Marketing and Communications dept. in Cary, N.C.

how an octopus saved a boy's life

BY MARALINA ALFONSO

At 4 a.m., when everything seemed silent, a small radio was still playing.

In a home marked by absence, 7-year-old Leonel wrestled with questions far too heavy for his age: Why was I born? Why do I have to suffer?

Deeply wounded by his parents' separation, Leonel's sadness turned into anger, then loneliness and ultimately into despair. But God was planting something in his heart.

Leonel Vesga, center, is baptized after committing his life to Christ.

CONTRIBUTED PHOTO

It all began with a simple moment. Leonel's father, searching for the news, turned the radio dial and found a different station. It was TWR, and within its programming, a broadcast that would change the boy's life forever: Pedrito el Pulpo (Peter the Octopus).

This small character, with stories full of imagination, values and biblical truth, began to accompany Leonel's days. Produced by RTM Venezuela, Pedrito el Pulpo connects with children across Latin America through storytelling and teaching.

From ages 7 to 14, Leonel did not walk alone, as he continued to listen to Pedrito and other TWR programming. More than mere entertainment, each episode offered companionship, guidance and hope. Little by little, the Word of God began to take root.

But his life remained difficult, and one day, Leonel made a decision: He planned to take his own life. Under the weight of accumulated pain, despair seemed to have the final word. Just as he was about to act, a voice interrupted the moment:

"Stop. Don't do it. Even if your father and mother abandon you, I will receive you."

It wasn't a coincidence. It was the seed that had been planted for years through Pedrito's stories echoing in his mind. It was the Word of God alive in his heart.

That day, instead of dying, Leonel began to live.

Even though his circumstances didn't change immediately, something within him did. Every program reminded him that he was not abandoned or forgotten. Although many voices told him, "You are worthless," the radio repeatedly told him he had a purpose. And together with a small Bible in his home, that message sustained him. Then, when he was 15, someone invited him to church, where he gave his life to Jesus Christ. God healed his heart, restored his relationship with his mother and redeemed his story.

Today, 34 years later, that boy who heard the voice of the Lord through an octopus on the radio serves as a pastor in Venezuela, and Leonel Vesga now dedicates his life to leading others toward that same hope he found.

A native of Paraguay, Maralina Alfonso serves as director of marketing and communications for TWR (or RTM) in Latin America.

A version of this story appeared earlier online.

TOP: Leonel Vesga with his family.
MIDDLE: Vesga as a teen.
ABOVE: Today, Vesga shares the hope of Christ as a pastor in Venezuela.

CONTRIBUTED PHOTOS

For decades, Pedrito el Pulpo has been introducing Venezuelan children to Jesus. Hear what little Pedrito has to say at transmundial.org/pedrito.

Drawing closer to God brings husband closer

> I cannot thank you enough for being more than family to me. ... You heard my call for help and walked through it all with me. Through our conversations, I saw the Lord and felt him closer than ever."
>
> – SALMA*

Salma's marriage had been falling apart for some time, so she finally contacted TWR Women of Hope's response team: She wanted advice on how to get a divorce.

The Sudanese woman had grown painfully distant from her husband, and though she knew about the God of the Bible, she struggled with faith and felt cut off from the Lord. After listening to an episode of Women of Hope, she got in touch with the team members, who listened to Salma* without judging her. The team doesn't look at divorce as a desirable solution to marital problems, and they offered Salma practical guidance about rebuilding relationships and developing healthier perspectives.

Research by Joshua Project classifies Sudan among the nations least reached by the gospel, and the World Watch List ranks it fourth among countries where persecution of Christians is extreme. Reasons like these are why TWR's Arabic Ministry began broadcasting a series of programs called Hope for Sudan to the battle-scarred and predominantly Muslim land. Striving to bring hope and healing in Jesus to women globally, Women of Hope is a part of that series.

After months of conversing, encouraging and praying with Salma from afar, the response team was elated when she invited Christ into her life.

"I cannot thank you enough for being more than family to me," she wrote to the team. "… You heard my call for help and walked through it all with me. Through our conversations, I saw the Lord and felt him closer than ever."

Salma's perspective on marriage began to change as she realized that both partners had human limitations and that peace was growing in her as she grew closer to God. Her husband noticed the transformation and began making efforts to improve their relationship. Sometimes, they would come together to pray.

She continues to reach out to the response team occasionally for advice and encouragement. Salma's story shows how meaningful engagement through a radio program can lead to life-changing interaction with believers trained to answer tough spiritual questions, a decision to follow Jesus Christ and the potential for a marriage to be restored.

– This article written by TWR staff.

 A pseudonym to protect her privacy*

A priceless blessing

"Why did you bring another daughter into this home?"

Yasmin* felt the familiar sting of discouragement and shame at her mother-in-law's question. It was one she had already heard several times as each of her five daughters entered the world, and every time, her mother-in-law humiliated her in front of the family.

Even though the situation was beyond her control, Yasmin's sense of worth plummeted. "I started to feel gloomy and depressed because having daughters is still often not respected in our society," Yasmin shared. For women in Pakistan, where she lived, life was often extensively restricted. But when she discovered TWR's Women of Hope programming, it stirred her heart.

"I would hear uplifting messages about the importance of daughters and how they are priceless blessings from God," Yasmin explained. "Through this, I discovered that all children, regardless of gender, are made with love and purpose."

Because of what she heard in the broadcast, Yasmin was inspired to seek a job so that she could provide for her daughters' education and help them create a safe and promising future. "Although it hasn't been simple, God has given me courage and determination," she said. "I am incredibly grateful to God today for transforming both my heart and my circumstances. Additionally, I am incredibly appreciative of the fellowship and the Women of Hope program, which supported me at my lowest moments. I now see my girls as a blessing and a gift from God, rather than a burden."

Pakistan shares social norms with neighboring Afghanistan and North India – the region known within TWR as PANI. Because of that, radio continues to be the most dependable and trusted medium for women in the region. It is affordable, widely available and easily accessible. Since 2014, TWR's PANI transmitter has been a vital resource in airing God's Word to gospel-starved South Asia, reaching countless women like Yasmin in the privacy of their homes. In these cultures where women often do not have much to call their own, the ability to receive spiritual encouragement, hope and biblical teaching that nourishes their yearning hearts is invaluable.

– This article written by TWR staff.

 A pseudonym to protect her privacy*

YOU CAN HAVE A KINGDOM IMPACT

Barbara, who is 92, asked us about a duplex rental property she no longer wants. Could she use it as a gift to TWR? After consulting with her, TWR proposed a plan she accepted: Barbara will give the property through a charitable remainder trust. That provides income to her for life and shares God's Word with millions for the future.

LEGACY GIFT OPTIONS TO CONSIDER:

- Gift IRA or 401(k)
- Charitable gift annuity
- Charitable remainder trust

P.O. Box 8700
Cary, NC 27512-8700

1.800.456.7897
twr.org

Return service requested

Non profit
US Postage
Paid
Permit 339
Cary, NC

Reduce your taxable income even if you do not itemize deductions.

Make a gift that is not subject to the deduction limits on charitable gifts.

Use your rollover to make a gift to a missionary or project of your choice.

If you'd like to explore ways to maximize your kingdom impact and give more to TWR and the other ministries you love, scan the QR code or visit twr.org/other-ways. Ready to talk now? Reach out to Tim McElhaney at 330.647.1789 or tmcelhan@twr.org.